Law Wab, a Chinese laundryman, of 161 Walnut street, and Ltzzie Feuerstein, the afteen-year-old daughter of a washerwoman living on a floor above Law Wah's place appeared in the Tombs Police Court this morning to explain their presence on Pell Law Wah was charged with abducting the wirl and both were held by Justice Divver for examination Friday afternoon.

Law Wah is as much " Melican " in appearance as a Chinaman can be while retaining his queue, and, so far as dress is concerned he might be taken for a Broadway dude. He san talk fairly good English and is said by Lizzie's mother to be a member of a Chinese Sunday-school, but Law would not tell what one. He looks about twenty-five years old, but it wouldn't be sale to bet on it. His appearance, he claims, before an Amer dge was when he was led up to the rail in front of Justice Divver's desk. Lizzie was introduced to the Justice at the same She is a bashful young girl, almost full grown, and her face is older than her dress would indicate. " How did you come to New York ?" was the first question asked her.

"With a friend," she replied, diplomat

"With a friend," she replied, diplomatically.

"What's his name?"

"Why, on, it's Low Wah."

"Did your mother tell you that you could some?"

"No; but grandma did."

"She is seventy-five years old and don't know," broke in Lizzie's mother.

"I'm a widow and have to do washing. I left Lizzie at work and when I came back last night she was gorr. Then about 9 o'clock I heard she was arrested."

"Law asked be to go with him to Central Park and grandma said I could," sobbed Lizzie. "I didn't do nothing wrong. After we went to the Park Law took me to Chinastown and bought me nuts and toa. He told me not to look at ahy of the other Chinese, and I didn't. We wasn't deling nothing when we was arrested, was we, Law!"

"No," answered Law, with a wise shake of the head.

"Law uses me nice," continued Lizzie. "He brings me candy and is awtul kind, and he don't act mean like white men."

"Did Law pay your fare?" asked the Justice.

"Why, of course. He always does when

"Lizzie often goes into his laundry," she said to an Evenne World reporter this morning. "He is a nice Chinaman and treats garten system will be established gradually, us all good. We have known him several years. My busband has been dead six years, i wouldn't have let her go with him to New Tork if she had asked me, and Law Wah took advantage of her by getting permission from her grandma. He coaved her to go, and they left about 3 oclock."

The Commissioner Sanger says that the kinder-garten system will be established gradually, tainly is an extraordinary one. The commissioner desired to have the Kinder-garten course made general and uniform and not left to the decision of the local Board of Trustees.

The couple were arrested by Policeman Reeley in Wing Wah Ching's grocery store, 3e Peli street.
